DR. JOE COULTER AND CINDY JONES

Republicans not "accumulation of extremists"

Dr. Coulter Denies Republican Party Extremist Group

The way to whip poverty in the Valley is to "provide a political atmosphere in which a man can develop his talents in himself to become functional in our society."

relative and cannot be completely eliminated. The mistake about poverty, as defined by President Johnson, is telling a group they are poor to the point of needing the Federal government to change their position, he told the group.

Hits Foreign Policy

Striking at the administration's foreign policy, Coulter called attention to the recent Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) report claiming the most the United States could hope for in South Viet Nam is a stalemate.

Another area of the Democratic Party he criticized was naming the GOP as an "accumulation of extremists." Coulter said, "It is simply not true. Republicanism protects the individual."

He said Republican principles call for sound, efficient and respectable government, based on Constitutional rule.

"Do not accept any kind of degrading remarks about the Republican Party," he continued.

Coulter concluded his speech by telling the young high school students, "I earnestly submit myself to you in hope you will help with my election."

Also at the meeting were Joe Rodriguez, Republican constable candidate; Don Osborn, area Republican chairman, and Bob Jones, county chairman.

In the business portion of the meeting, Cindy Jones, club chairman, heard discussion and plans for a bake sale Saturday to raise funds. The sale will be conducted in the First National Bank, HEB food stores and Andy's Model Market.

The young people also decided on a Friday meeting to hear Young Republican chairman,

So said Dr. Joseph Coulter of Brownsville, Republican candidate to the 15th Congressional District opposing Kika de la Garza, Democrat and state Representative from Mission.

Coulter spoke to the Harlingen Young Republican Club meeting in the First National Bank. Over 40 Young Republicans attended the session.

Coulter said the area had been plagued for years by poverty. But poverty, he said, is
